

Wave Sciences moves HQ to Charleston

June 12, 2009

CHARLESTON, SC - Wave Sciences Corp., an internationally recognized leader in audio and video forensics and services supporting surveillance and intelligence gathering, is relocating its corporate headquarters to Charleston, South Carolina.

The company says it considered Atlanta, Georgia; Raleigh, North Carolina and other communities in South Carolina.

Wave Sciences Corporation President J. Keith McElveen said the company chose Charleston based on the proximity to his federal government customers, the growing advanced Security Cluster in the Charleston Region, attractive lifestyle and the presence of the Charleston International Airport's competitive airline service.

"There is an energy in Charleston similar to what I saw at Raleigh's Research Triangle Park several years back," stated Keith McElveen. "There is a definite feeling that this place is going somewhere," he added.

Wave Sciences Corp. is located at the Flagship, Charleston's premier co-working business environment that opened to entrepreneurs on June 1, 2009 and is being managed by the City of Charleston's Charleston Digital Corridor initiative.
